OFFICE MEMORANDUM

DATE: November 3, 1986

TO: Mr. Barber B. Conable

FROM: S. Shahid Husain

EXTENSION:

SUBJECT: The Bank's Technical Assistance and Cofinancing Activities

In response to your request, here are (a) data on technical assistance (TA) from the Bank over the past five years (Annex A), and (b) data on cofinancing over the same period (Annex B). The cofinancing data is self-explanatory, except that the numbers on non-project lending are rather amorphous for reasons outlined in the note. The TA data falls into three categories:

1. Project-related TA. The largest source of Bank/IDA TA is components of investment projects, followed by free-standing loans and credits, the Project Preparation Facility (which advances funds -- subsequently refinanced in the loan/credit -- for preparatory work on projects when alternatives are not available), and the Special Project Preparation Facility (established in FY84 as a three-year $10 million fund for investment-related work in Sub-Saharan Africa).
2. TA Financed from the Administrative Budget. A large amount of TA is implicit in the regular work (and the administrative budget) of the Bank, although we normally do not include it in our TA statistics. Approximately, and somewhat arbitrarily, we would consider 50% of our country economic and sector work, 50% of our supervision work, and 25% of our lending work as de facto TA. The work of the Economic Development Institute is entirely TA, and about 70% of the work of Cooperative Programs with FAO, UNESCO and UNIDO (for which we finance 75%) is TA. Lastly, we second about 20 staff under the "TA Program for IDA countries" to provide on-site TA.
3. TA Administered but not Financed by the Bank. The Bank serves as "executing agency" for many UNDP-financed projects, some of which also receive bilateral cofinancing. (Examples are the large management assistance program in energy and several key low-cost technology research and development projects related to the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade). The Bank provides reimbursible technical assistance to capital-surplus countries, and to the International Fund for Agricultural Development for the preparation and appraisal of projects.

The attached table shows a fairly steady level of TA at about $1.5 billion per year. The data does not include World Bank research or policy work (the results of which are of substantial assistance to member countries). Nor does it include Bank contributions to the Consultative Group for International Agricultural Research, the Tropical Disease Research Program, the International Center for Insect Physiology and Ecology, and the Special Program for African Agricultural Research -- which total some $40 million.

I should mention that we are in the process of preparing a report to the Board -- for review in March, 1987 -- on the Bank's technical assistance policy.

NOTE ON COFINANCING STATISTICS

1. The attached tables show the extent to which cofinanciers' contributions mobilized for supporting Bank-assisted projects have supplemented the contribution of IBRD/IDA. These tables, however, do not give a full measure of the catalytic effect of Bank operations, particularly in highly indebted countries where Bank support of their economic programs is crucial for mobilizing other resources well beyond those needed to directly cofinance Bank-assisted projects or programs.
2. For example, in Colombia, the Bank's support of the economic adjustment program with a trade policy and export diversification loan of US$300 million in May 1985 helped persuade commercial banks to voluntarily restore the trade lines they had cancelled in 1986 and early 1985. The Bank support along with the quarterly review of the Colombian economy by the IMF also enabled Colombia to obtain commitments for US$1 billion in medium-term financing from commercial banks for completing a number of export oriented projects. The commercial banks, while not entering into any formal cofinancing arrangements with the Bank, made the disbursement of the third and fourth tranches of this $1 billion facility dependent on Colombia qualifying for disbursement from the second tranche of the Bank's trade policy loan.
3. Similarly in Chile, while the formal cofinancing provided by the commercial banks was only US$300 million (underpinned with a guarantee of US$150 million from the Bank) for a highway sector project, the successful completion of this loan helped complete the total money package of US$1.1 billion and the multiyear rescheduling covering the 1985-87 maturities of Chilean commercial debt amounting to US$6 billion.
4. Likewise in many low income countries, IDA operations, apart from providing direct opportunities for cofinancing to other donors, also form a base for an aid coordination effort by the Bank and help encourage other aid providers to support the adjustment program agreed by the borrower with the Bank and the IMF.

 Subject: Multilateral Cofinancing in Bank/IDA-Assisted Projects

1. In response to some recent inquiries about the volume of official multilateral cofinancing associated with Bank/IDA projects, Mrs. Schwartz has come up with data for the last five fiscal years which you might find useful (see attached table). The largest multilateral cofinancers (out of a total of 32 for the period) are as follows:

Multilateral Cofinancing, FY82-86

| Institution | No. Projects | Amount (US$) | % of total multilateral |
|-------------------------------------|---------------------|----------------------|--------------------------------|
| 1. African Dev. Bank/Fund | 52 | 893.2 | 16.6 |
| 2. Asian Dev. Bank | 23 | 737.7 | 13.7 |
| 3. European Coal and Steel Comm.* | 1 | 600.0 | 11.2 |
| 4. Special African Facility | 21 | 535.8 | 10.2 |
| 5. European Investment Bank | 34 | 529.1 | 9.8 |
| 6. Int. Fund for Agric. Dev. (IFAD) | 41 | 382.6 | 7.1 |
| 7. Inter-American Development Bank | 8 | 349.8 | 6.5 |
