SMEs as drivers for fair business through anti-corruption collective action

I 2-250

Abstract: Since the 2008 World Bank guide for business "Fighting Corruption Through Collective Action," the need for multi-stakeholder collaboration to address corruption has gained momentum, including through the 2021 OECD Anti-Bribery Recommendation. Small and medium enterprises (SMEs) represent the critical mass that can help drive positive change for a cleaner business environment. However, they need clear business incentives and a tailored approach considering their limited resources for compliance. Collective Action allows for peer learning, capacity-building, as well as collaborative problem-solving addressing integrity challenges. This panel brings together experts with hands-on experience of the benefits and challenges of anti-corruption Collective Action.

Financial intermediary lending: A path to clean energy or a loophole for fossil fuel financing?

Abstract: Coal financing has not stopped while oil and fossil gas continue to expand, partly backed via indirect finance. Financial intermediary lending is increasingly common among financial institutions such as IFC, but concerns remain on how this type of lending perpetuates fossil fuel investments and brings harm to people and planet.

Green and just? Climate in IMF surveillance & lending – evidence from Pakistan, Argentina, South Africa, Indonesia

HQ2-03B-768B

Abstract: The IMF's efforts to mainstream climate in its work are increasingly evident. Climate goals feature in loans to Argentina and Pakistan, and Article IV reports for South Africa and Indonesia. The recently launched RST will support investment and policy reforms in the areas of climate mitigation and adaptation. However, questions remain on the extent to which this will happen in accordance with principles of climate and economic justice. Recent research shows that IMF programs continue to have a contradictory and often harmful approach to fossil fuels and a weak consideration for the macroeconomic implications of climate physical and transition risks.
